

Click's Everyday Magic

Click and the Very Helpful Cat

Book Three

Strangewoven

StrangeWoven.com

CLICK'S EVERYDAY MAGIC

BOOK THREE

Click and the Very Helpful Cat

Strangewoven

A little curiosity.
A little kindness.
Time for everyone.

StrangeWoven.com

June and Dad were planning an Easter egg hunt.
Click offered to hide the eggs.
“Hidden,” he asked,
“but you still want people to find them?”

“Easy places for the little children,” June said.
“And a few tricky places for the older ones.”
Click nodded carefully.
“Hiding. But only a little.”

Click tucked an egg beneath a low bush.
A striped cat appeared.
One white paw reached out.
The egg rolled straight back.
“Oh,” said Click. “Too difficult?”

He tried another hiding place.
The cat found that egg, too.
It rolled the egg toward his slippers.
Click tilted his head.
“Is this where you think it goes?”

Soon, eggs were gathering beside Click's feet.
He looked at the eggs.
He looked at the cat.
"I seem to be hiding them backward."

June laughed.
“I think the cat has invented a game.”
Click watched another egg roll past.
“A very helpful game,” he said.
“Except for the helping.”

With June's help, Click hid the eggs again.
Some peeked out from the grass.
Some nestled beside the bushes.
The cat watched every single one.

Then Dad called, "Ready, everyone?"
Children hurried into the garden.
One little child stayed near the gate.
Their basket was empty.
Click put his own basket down.

“Would you like to look together?” he asked.

The child nodded.

Click sat beside them for a moment.

The cat brushed against his slipper.

Click made a little trail of easy-to-spot eggs.
One beside a daisy.
One near a tree.
The child followed at their own pace.
There was plenty of time to look.

A white paw nudged one last egg into view.
“Found one!” the child said.
Click smiled at the cat.
This time, its game really had helped.

Afterward, Click looked into his empty basket.

“June?”

“Yes?”

“I think someone has hidden a cat in here.”

The cat slept on.

TIME FOR EVERYONE.

The End

Click's Everyday Magic • Book Three

Strangewoven

StrangeWoven.com