

Click's Everyday Magic

Click and the Wobbly Wheels

Book Six

Strangewoven

StrangeWoven.com

CLICK'S EVERYDAY MAGIC

BOOK SIX

Click and the Wobbly Wheels

Strangewoven

A little balance.
A little patience.
Another little try.

StrangeWoven.com

“Would you like to learn?” June asked.
Click looked at her bicycle.
June smiled.
“I can show you.”

First, Click changed into lace-up shoes.
His slippers stayed together on the porch.
“I’ll tell you how it goes,” he told them.
June tried not to giggle.

Dad found a bicycle that fitted Click.
He lowered the seat and checked the bike.
Then he helped adjust Click's helmet.
June fastened her own helmet strap.

Click stood over the bicycle with both feet down.
He looked at the front wheel.
He looked at the back wheel.
“Are we certain that’s enough?”

“First, let’s try the brakes,” June said.
Click squeezed the levers as she showed him.
The bicycle stayed still.
“I like this part already.”

June pushed along and coasted a little way.
“Little pushes,” she said. “Then a little glide.”
Click watched her wheels turn.
That looked almost possible.

He tried. The bicycle wobbled.
Click looked down at his feet.
One shoe went straight back onto the ground.
“Mine seems to prefer standing.”

They rested on the bench for a moment.
“There are a lot of things to do at once,”
Click told June.
“We can do them a little at a time,” she said.

June showed him the brakes again.
“You can stop whenever you need to.”
Click looked at the levers beneath his fingers.
He could try.
And he could stop.

Click gave another little push.
For a moment, both shoes lifted.
The wheels carried him a little way.
Then he stopped.
“I did the gliding part!”

He tried again, with Dad walking nearby.
This time, Click found the pedals.
One turn. Then another.
June cheered from beside her bicycle.
Click was riding.

He stopped and put both feet down.
“June?”
“Yes?”
“I think my feet have stopped arguing with the wheels.”

A LITTLE AT A TIME.

The End

Click's Everyday Magic • Book Six

Strangewoven

StrangeWoven.com